

Abstract

A method of distributing educational content over a network is disclosed.

Educational content is divided into topics and the topics are split into smaller 5 educational units. Professionals reviewing the material for accreditation purposes choose particular units to study and are subject to minimum and maximum time parameters. The partitioning of educational topics allows advertisers to deliver episodic advertising over an extended time period.